will pass upon the merits of the respective claims.

Incorporated in the peace treaty, which is shortly to be delivered into the hands of the German delegates at Versalites, are two momentous clauses.
These call for the trial of the former German emperor by an international rebunal consisting of five judges on a charge of "a supreme offeres azainst international morality and the sancitiity of treaties" and for the trial by military courts of German officers who may be accused of having violated the laws and customs of war. The surrender of William Hohenzollers, who move is in Holland, and of other persons required by the courts is to be demanded by the powers.

The German peace delegation is reported already to have left German
